STUDENT INTERNS FACE CHALLENGE TO LEARNING AT FMC

Fort Mason Center's commitment to education and to the community at large is demonstrated not only by the classes and workshops listed here in the monthly Calendar, but also is shown by active participation in the Challenge to Learning Community Internship Program. Two student interns from the program, Rick Cornns and Andre Harris, are now working at Fort Mason, an arrangement which benefits all involved in many ways.

Challenge to Learning is a non-profit school to which students are referred by special education personnel of the local school district and by other social service workers. Although the students in the Special Education Program experience a broad range of learning disorders, the main focus is on those whom Vocational Coordinator Shepherd Siegel prefers to call "culturally disgruntled," that is, those students for whom "something has gone wrong—perhaps it's the kid, perhaps it's society."

Challenge to Learning concerns itself with remedying each student's individual deficiencies, whether academic, vocational or social; survival skills and preparation for successful functioning in the adult world are stressed. The Community Internship Program, one facet of this highly pragmatic and fruitful approach, teaches job skills by placing students on actual job-sites under normal working conditions. The firms (and foundations) that become involved in the program are responsible only for providing some supervision and training and, of course, work for the student interns to do. Although the students work without pay, receiving school credit instead, their internship entails all of the responsibilities encountered in the workaday world. Time cards are filled out; conformance with grooming standards is required; punctuality and good attendance are learned along with the actual job skills.

Siegel, a firm believer in the value of learning by doing, notes that recent studies indicate that those culturally deprived persons who lose their jobs do so because of a lack of appropriate social skills rather than due to poor job performance. The Community Internship Program addresses this problem by providing an environment in which the students can learn which sorts of public behaviour win acceptance from potential employers. Successfully facing the challenges posed by this program provides the interns with more than job and social skills; the students undergo a healthy growth in the self-esteem crucial for further achievement.

Rick Cornns and Andre Harris are currently working under the supervision of the maintenance staff at Fort Mason. In the nearly six months of their internship, Rick and Andre have acquired the sort of experience that gives them a better chance in the job market. Beginning by buffing floors and washing windows, Cornns and Harris have progressed to providing significant assistance in the current remodelling work underway in Building F, painting and installing insulation and flooring. Because of his hard work here at Fort Mason, Andre will soon be advancing to a paying job at another location; Rick is applying for a position as a maintenance aide for the State Park and Recreation system.

Two young men are successfully making the difficult transition to responsible adult life and Building F is going to look great. If your firm would like to become involved in the worthwhile program, you can learn more by contacting Shepherd Siegel, the Vocational Coordinator for Challenge to Learning, at (415) 221-9200.

FORT MASON CENTER UPDATE

NEW CLASSES/NEW GROUP/S.F. FAIR

Have you ever wanted to join a circus? Make-A-Circus, a program of Feedback Productions, is sponsoring a series of classes that might help your dreams come true. The School of Circus Arts began in January this year. Classes for children and adults in juggling, ropewalking, clowning and tumbling are offered at The Farm, 1499 Potrero Avenue. The second session begins April 7. For more information call 776-8477.

Fort Mason Center has a new resident—the Intergenerational Programs Network. Temporarily housed in C105, the IPN is a clearinghouse of resources and information for intergenerational programs in Northern California. Director Carmencita Grant brings to the program a background rich in visual and performing arts, writing, poetry, an interdisciplinary degree in aging as well as six years of administrative experience.

This spring, IPN will co-sponsor a conference on aging education, "Teaching and Learning About Aging." The conference will be held in St. Helena, May 4-6. For more information call IPN at 771-2884.

"Hi Ho, Come to the Fair!" This year the San Francisco Fair & Exposition will be at Fort Mason Center, June 14-17. FMC residents are busy planning how to entertain the thousands of visitors. Fort Mason Foundation is co-sponsoring, with the North Beach Photographic Art Fair, "The Fort Mason Experience" Photo Contest. The contest is open to amateur and professional youth and adult photographers who attend and photograph the fair. More details on the fair and contests will be available next month.

"We have just celebrated our fourth year at Fort Mason Center. We're here because the Center wanted a resident theater company in its theater space, and this provided the opportunity for a number of groups to form an organization which is now called People's Theater Coalition.

"For us, the most profound advantage here is the sheer number of resident groups and other activities taking place—it all makes a marvelous traffic builder. People come to recognize where we are located, and it puts out the view that the arts community is working together. There is the feeling that Fort Mason Center is the last frontier . . . still space to develop in the warehouses and piers. I am very interested in how additional space is developed and who will be there. Would it be possible, for instance, to put in a 300-500 seat theater which could be used by hundreds of people or theater companies?"

Susan Hoffman, Executive Director People's Theatre Coalition
